The play is set as the 1950s come to a close and one of the last real radio programs is hanging on for dear life. The Adventures of Detective Mitch Claymore has been on the air for many years, but it looks like the final episode has finally arrived. Television is transforming the imagination of the people and radio dramas are on their way out. This handful of radio professionals might have one last chance to save their show. With the script fresh out of the typewriter and a wild selection of sound effects, they prepare for the performance of their lives. But this is live radio and as everyone knows in the business of broadcasting, that in itself can be an adventure.
